*Tiwi and the Dutch -
Celebrating 300 Years Together*

In 1705, Dutch navigators came to Bathurst and Melville islands, looking for trade and for chances to expand their empire into Nova Hollandia. Between April and July 1705, Maarten van Delft and his men spent three months exploring the islands and making contact with the Tiwi people.

In 2005, Dutch people and their companies are back on the Tiwi islands, making good the opportunities which were dreamed of so long ago.

This is a book which tells of the Tiwi and the Dutch - yesterday, today and tomorrow.
